UFOs:
What Your Government
Isn't Telling You

A CIA Officer's Global Analysis and Secret Documents Revealed

Every national government in the world agrees that alien life is nearly a certainty.

Every national government in the world agrees that alien life is nearly a certainty. You won't hear a president or prime minister say it during a press conference or a fundraiser, but they say it behind closed doors, in dark hallways, and in war rooms from Washington to Moscow.

Part 1: The Facts About UFOs in the World

National Security is a game of probabilities. Countries decide what new weapons they need to develop, when to train more troops, and where to aim their satellites based on complex mathematical algorithms. Super computers spit out a long list of possible outcomes, each with a statistical probability of coming true, and world leaders use that list to make decisions about military spending, foreign policy, and where to plant covert intelligence operatives.

Modern statistical research concludes that non-human, extraterrestrial life has 9:1 odds of existing inside the Milky Way Galaxy. Would you take that bet?

Extraterrestrial life has 9:1 odds of existing inside the Milky Way Galaxy

But knowing whether or not alien life exists is not really the question your government wants to know. They have three questions they think are much more important:

1. Is the non-human, extraterrestrial life sentient and intelligent (ie: can it think and feel)?
2. Does the non-human, extraterrestrial life pose an immediate threat to national interests?
3. Is there reason to suspect the non-human, extraterrestrial life will ally with an adversarial country and there by become a threat to national interests?

Contrary to what you have been told and what you have read, your government indeed takes UFOs (officially called UAPs - 'Unidentified Aerial Phenomena') very seriously. The risk UFOs pose to military readiness, communications infrastructure, and geopolitical power is significant. This is the reason every first-world nation has a central government office tracking, logging, and analyzing UFO activity.

In the United States, UFO research and investigation falls squarely within the Intelligence Community - with responsibility shared between CIA, FBI, and DoD. In Great Britain, responsibility for UFOs is also an intelligence matter - primarily overseen by British Defense Intelligence. Other European countries assign UFO matters to their national space agency, as with France's CNES and Italy's ASI.

In the US, UFO research and investigation sits with the Intelligence Community

Where countries differ the most is in how they choose to prioritize UFO research and investigation efforts. In democratic nations, changes in national leadership often result in changes to UFO program interest, support, and funding. These changes are extremely prevalent in the United States, where UFO funding through the 1950s was secure, waned through the mid-1960s, spiked again in the early 1970s, dropped-off in the 1980s, and continues to waffle back-and-forth based on who resides in the White House.

With advances in air travel, drone technology, and the commercialization of space, interest in UFOs is at an all time high.

With rapid technological advances in air travel, drone technology, and the commercialization of space capabilities, government interest in UFOs is at a historic high around the world. Multiple military and civilian reports have highlighted a troubling increase in aircraft crashes, inflight emergencies, near-miss collisions, and unidentified aircraft sightings all due to UAP activity.

Part 2: The Current State of UFOs in the World

Since 2010, multiple high-impact, science-based government studies on UFO activity have been completed, reviewed, and promptly classified in the US, UK, and across Europe. Public pressure has forced government officials to change their positions and release previously classified reports, like those included in the annex of this special report.

Pairing these classified studies with raw military and CIA intelligence reports highlights a few important correlations:

- UFO activity peaks at times of global tension (the Cold War, Iran nuclear efforts, global recession, etc.)
- UFO activity is reported most frequently by military and commercial airline crews (where multiple witnesses describe the event rather than just one)
- UFO activity is most commonly discovered in rural settings where sightings are clustered near military, nuclear, or access controlled facilities (ie: waste treatment, weapons development, private research & development, etc.)

Classified reports have highlighted these correlations and governments have taken action on them. One of the most telling examples is the official UK Ministry of Defense Scientific & Technical memorandum (Annex item 1a) that states, "It is recommended that further investigation should be taken...[for] novel military application."

As much as 95% of publicly reported UFO activity can be linked to secret, classified, or sensitive projects...

In the US, classified CIA documents from the Directorate of Science & Technology (Annex item 1b) confirm that, "At this present time, there are offices and personnel within the Agency who are monitoring the UFO phenomena... [for] any information which might indicate a threat potential... or application of UFO related research."

It is widely acknowledged that as much as 95% of publicly reported UFO activity can be linked to secret, classified, or sensitive projects and airborne national security operations. The development, experimentation, and trial flights of CIA's A-12 Oxcart and U-2 Dragonlady airframes were the cornerstone for public UFO sightings throughout the 1950s and 1960s.

On the other side of the globe, Russia was engineering equally secret fighter and reconnaissance aircraft. It becomes clear when looking at French Air Safety UFO Studies (Annex item 2a) that the massive spike in sightings, locations, and altitudes were being driven by the Cold War between the US and Russia. Even as the cold war ended, private US companies like Lockheed Martin and Boeing continued to create secret aircraft for the US Air Force like the F-117 Nighthawk and the YF-118G Bird of Prey.

Government and military leaders recognize that UFO activity is expected in 3 predictable and nearly untraceable forms:

1. Allied technology being developed and tested in secret.
2. Compartmented but approved secret travel for diplomatic, intelligence, or military operations.
3. Hostile government or commercial prototype development being tested in international or allied territory.

With these three known eventualities in play, governments continue to fund, track, and monitor UFO activity (Annex items 2b-2e). It is also the reason why so much government recorded UFO activity remains classified to this day.

Your government isn't interested in UFOs for the same reason you are.

Your government isn't interested in UFOs for the same reason you are. They look to the skies with fear, survival, and conflict in mind. Even if they have the imagination to consider intelligent non-human life, they are (correctly) focused on potential threats posed by hostile human actors against national sovereignty.

Part 3: The Future of UFOs in the World

As technology, information, and connectivity continues to improve, you can expect more UFO sightings, reports, and data than ever before. Governments will continue to hold-back information they see as possible national threats, but they will also release select information that serves their interests.

The selective release of information is exactly what you saw in the early 2021 release of previously classified CIA and US military records related to UFOs. Under direction from Congress, the CIA and other Intelligence Community partners were given 180 days to create a detailed, complete report on UFOs.

Per the US Congress on December 27, 2020:

"The Committee supports the efforts of the Unidentified Aerial Phenomenon Task Force at the Office of Naval Intelligence to standardize collection and reporting on unidentified aerial phenomenon, any links they have to adversarial foreign governments, and the threat they pose to U.S. military assets and installations.

However, the Committee remains concerned that there is no unified, comprehensive process within the Federal Government for collecting and analyzing intelligence on unidentified aerial phenomena, despite the potential threat. The Committee understands that the relevant intelligence may be sensitive; nevertheless, the Committee finds that the information sharing and coordination across the Intelligence Community has been inconsistent, and this issue has lacked attention from senior leaders.

UFO activity will be prioritized, funded, and followed with more government attention in the future - not less.

Therefore, the Committee directs the DNI, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense and the heads of such other agencies as the Director and Secretary jointly consider relevant, to submit a report within 180 days of the date of enactment of the Act, to the congressional intelligence and armed services committees on unidentified aerial phenomena (also known as “anomalous aerial vehicles”), including observed airborne objects that have not been identified.”

Congress’s actions suggest that UFO activity will be prioritized, funded, and followed with more government attention in the future - not less. You can expect increased organization, collection, and reporting of UFO discoveries in classified intelligence channels. While it may seem reasonable to expect that the government will share their new findings with the public, it is much more likely that they will continue to strategically cultivate what information they share.

Consider the recent release of US Navy footage by the Pentagon capturing UFOs mid-flight performing seemingly impossible aerobatic maneuvers. That footage, as authentic as it is, represents only one of more than 120 unique UFO reports collected by Navy pilots in the last two decades. Further, that footage was reviewed and approved for release to the public... but why?

Understanding that the US government collects and protects credible UFO documentation, the release of the navy footage demonstrates two National Security strategies:

1. Publicly demonstrate to the non-US developer of the technology that the US military is both aware and able to track/target that technology.

It is a proven covert influence technique to ‘leak’ footage that can shape public opinion to support government objectives.

2. Encourage public reporting of future instances where the same/similar technology is observed.

With the Pentagon formally acknowledging in May 2021 that the 'tic-tac' vehicle captured in the navy footage was not of US military or commercial origin, the US government only stands to benefit from making this kind of footage public. It is a classic covert influence technique (dating back to World War I and popular throughout the Cold War) to 'leak' footage that helps shape public opinion in support of government objectives.

Mathematicians have concluded that there is a 1 in 500,000,000 chance that any given UFO sighting will be of non-human origin.

In keeping true to the statistical reasoning that drives National Security decision making, mathematicians have concluded that there is a 1 in 500,000,000 chance that any given UFO sighting will be of non-human origin. Despite the incredible odds in favor of non-human life in the Milky Way, government and scientists have not yet found a way to measure the potential sophistication of an extraterrestrial civilization.

Consider how technologically advanced human kind has become in the last 100 years. Even so, we only recently created an airborne drone of our own able to operate inside another planet's atmosphere - NASA's 'Ingenuity' drone (Annex item 3a). When your government considers the estimated 30 Milky Way planets capable of hosting life, compares that against the high-frequency of UFO sightings linked to known events, calculates the low probability that one of those 30 planets hosts civilization more advanced than earth, and then measures the threat-level for known vs. unknown risks, they cannot help but ignore the small margin of possibility that extra-terrestrial life could be contributing to overall UFO activity.

Part 4: Government vs. Public Conclusions

The core of mankind's obsessions with extraterrestrial life is not shared by the men and women appointed to government office. Your government's focus is on practical issues that pose known, immediate risks to your nation's sovereignty.

But the innate human interest in UFOs runs much deeper than government policy interests. The possibility of non-human civilization relates to human spirituality as much as it does science and discovery. Leading world religions all make reference to humans being one part of a larger universe, intelligently designed and overseen by a universal power.

It is unlikely that extraterrestrial life, technology, or transport would be anything like what we have on earth.

In the Christian bible, Hebrews 1:2-3 states:

He [Jesus] is the radiance of the glory of God and the exact imprint of his nature, and he upholds the universe by the word of his power.

In the Muslim Quran, Chapter 21:19 states:

Everyone in the heavens and earth belongs to Him, and those that are with Him are never too proud to worship Him, nor do they grow weary;*

(*note: 'Heavens' was the Arabic word for Universe at the time - and the Quran explained multiple aspects of modern astronomy like big-bang, black holes, etc. using the term 'heavens'.')

In the Buddhist Lotus Sutra, Chapter XXIV (Titled: Bodhisattva Gadgadasvara) states:

In the worlds through which he passed, the land quaked... The eyes of this bodhisattva were as large as blue lotus leaves... His body was pure gold in color, adorned with immeasurable hundreds of thousands of merits, radiant with virtuous dignity, and brilliantly illuminated like the adamantine body of the god Nārāyaṇa. Having entered the seven-jeweled platform and ascended into the air, he flew above the earth at a height of seven tāla trees.

Despite what sci-fi and pop culture promotes, it is unlikely that extraterrestrial life, technology, or transport would be anything like what we have on earth. Instead, they would be as foreign to us as the lifeforms we see living in the deepest parts of the ocean. There is no reason to assume their engineering would use technology like ours, their physical size/stature would be similar to ours, or even that their skin or materials would land in our visible spectrum.

It is the limitless possibilities that make your curiosity about UFOs so powerful.

Governments and the people they are sworn to serve stand diametrically opposed on UFOs.

It is exactly those limitless possibilities that make your curiosity about UFOs so powerful. And it is the same requirement for faith and hope that make your government continually deprioritize efforts to find (or share) the answers you want (Annex items 4a-4b).

Governments and the people they are sworn to serve stand diametrically opposed on UFOs - with the first focused on practical concerns and the second focused on universal concerns. Governments seek to control and protect boundaries and populations by defining priorities, dividing resources, and distributing information selectively. But that process is only effective inside a homogeneous community like the human race.

To best meet growing evidence of UFOs and the possibility of non-human visitors, people have to force their governments to evolve in new ways that serve all of mankind in addition to just their sworn national protectorate.

Governments must evolve in new ways that serve all of mankind in addition to their sworn national protectorate.
